The screenshot shows a Windows 95 desktop with a single window titled 'X' containing the text 'Butter'. Below the window, a keyboard layout is overlaid. A red circle highlights the 'b' key, and a red arrow points to it from the number '90' on the left. The keyboard overlay includes standard QWERTY keys, function keys (F1-F12), and a numeric keypad.

A diagram of a 10x10 grid representing a 100-numbered telephone dial. The grid contains numbers 1-0 in the top row, letters A-P in the second row, Q-Z in the third row, and symbols (dash, asterisk, hash, space, comma, period) in the bottom row. A thick black line connects the number 4 to the number 0, passing through the letter 'Y' and 'J'.
